It was last June when we duly and gravely charged all the boys about the office to be good while we went away off down to Philanadelty. Probably two weeks had elspsed when we turned to a gentleman, who was standing in front of Memorial Hall, dressed in the extremest fashion, to ask the meaning of those big brenze horses, forty hands high, with wings on their backs, and which were tied up to girls for hitching posts. It wasn't the answer so much as the unexpected voice that took us down. It was no other than Tommy Holmes, who had been under our til this morning, when he came poking into the office.
